Washington, DC—Formtek Inc., a leading provider of Enterprise Content Management (ECM) software and implementation services, announced today that it was awarded a General Services Administration (GSA) schedule contract—schedule #GS-35F-0555P—making it easier for government agencies to procure Formtek's enterprise software tools and applications quickly and cost effectively.

"Formtek has long offered a secure and stable environment for government and private industry to collaborate on mission critical products. We supported the development of the F/A 22 fighter jet, F-16 Fighting Falcon, and we are currently helping Fairchild Air Force Base store critical document facility drawings," said Gary P. Mann, Formtek's President and Chief Executive Officer. "Now federal, state and local agencies can directly acquire Formtek's Enterprise Content Management software without going through exhaustive competitive pricing procedures."

Formtek customers in the government and private sector rely on Formtek to securely manage the creation, collaboration, and storage of technical information, proposals, engineering data and drawings, contracts, and corporate policies. Formtek's Enterprise Content Management products support all types of digital assets in one virtual content management system. It organizes and links electronic data, regardless of source, and creates a repository with numerous levels of user security.

The Formtek | Orion suite of products, solutions and services are platform independent—working with most standard hardware and software products and can be scaled and adapted quickly to changing needs. Formtek | Orion creates a transparent and flexible information flow throughout the organization by allowing information in departmental, corporate, and legacy data systems to be connected. The reliability of Formtek software allows government organizations to focus on the challenges of their business instead of on the challenges of managing information.

About Formtek.
